THE WORLD ACCORDING TO JOHN SALLEY

What we really want...we all like the big stuff (and I am certainly no exception), so here is some of the biggest and best stuff I could round up for you. You, like me, are a good person, and you deserve it all! Myself, I can't wait to fire up the grill...ok, well, have someone fire it up for me, and get a move on this summer. CHAR-BROIL INFRARED TEC SERIES

Ceramic infrared burners aren't exactly new—the first were developed by Thermal Engineering Corporation (TEC) more than two decades ago. But the new Char-Broil TEC Series grills feature a patented glass-top infrared cooking system. These grills offer an unprecedented cooking uniformity with no hot or cold spots and broad heat-intensity range that make TEC burners the hottest and coolest infrared burners available. Now that's the stuff that makes us backyard chefs so heroic. $700 (www.charbroil.com)

PANASONIC VIERA

This new 103-inch plasma HDTV from Panasonic is the biggest on the market. And for all that size, it's still only 5 inches thick. The pixel resolution is 1,920 X 1,080. (I don't really know what that means—I used to have like a 10 pixel camera, so there.) With this baby, you'll never again have a good excuse when someone asks you, "Aww, man! Did you see that?" $70k (www.panasonic.com)

SUPER BOWL XL OPUS

Talk about preaching some pigskin, this homage to the biggest game of them all certainly does it justice. Hand sewn and bound with fine leather, the Opus weighs in at a whopping 80 pounds at 850 pages. Inside those pages are pretty pictures and insightful words from the memoirs of Super Bowl greats throughout history. Go ahead and sell your ticket to the next Super Bowl—this is a ticket to 40 of them. $4,000 (www.krakenopus.com)

ARCHOS 604

Just a perfect example of something that makes life a little bit better. This 5-inch entertainment center lets you surf the Internet with WiFi, records from TV (or like a camcorder) and holds photos and 15,000 tunes. Plus, it looks sleeker than any other gadget for the punch it holds. $400 (www.archos.com)

3

OAKLEY THUMP PRO

I like all my gadgets wrapped up into smaller packages, and that's why I'm digging on these. The new Oakley Thump Pro sunglasses give you a stylish look when getting your sport on, while also featuring a mini MP3 player built in. You get 60-240 songs, 6 hours of play on a single charge, and some top-of-the-line shades to boot. $300 (www.oakley.com)

4

DAVI SKIN PRODUCTS

Here's just one more way wine makes life great. The Mondavi family, world-renowned for their wine valleys in Napa, California, makes this line of anti-aging skin products that are a natural offshoot of the wine-making process. For both men and women, their line of products just might make you look as sharp as one John Salley. I'll drink to that. $35-$175 (www.daviskin.com)

CONFEDERATE B120 WRAITH

Guys like Brad Pitt and Tom Cruise (and of course, John Salley) have been enamored, lately, with Confederate's luxury motorcycle line. And this baby takes the cake. Handcrafted and only 250 in existence, the new Wraith is modeled after an early 1900s design style. It looks like a futuristic cougar on wheels—and that's not too bad. $55k (www.confederate.com)
